SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The Coyne Laundry is located at the northwest corner of Bond and Thames Streets. In 1974, 10 lots were assembled (848-856 South Bond Street B 4002 and 1523-1534 Thames Street B 4001) for a commercial laundry. The Coyne Laundry property consists of a parking lot (at the site of 848-850 South Bond Street) and the facades of three brick rowhouses (852 and 854 South Bond Street and 1532-34 Thames Street) behind which the majority of original fabric was removed to create an industrial space which extends to the western boundary of the property.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

At the northern end of the Coyne Laundry property on Bond Street is a parking lot with a high chain link fence. (see photo 7) To the south end is a three story, late 19th century three bay brick building (852 Bond Street) painted yellow--the same color was used on all the laundry property on the street elevations. A door is found in the southern bay with a garage door to the north. The windows on the second and third floors have one over one sash. The building has a projecting brick cornice, as well as a row of brick under the window sills. (see photo 6) This facade appears to date from the end of the 19th century.

SIGNIFICANCE

In the history of Fell's Point, the corner of Thames and Bond Streets is one of the most significant parts of the historic district in terms of the history and evolution of the area. The properties at 1532-1534 Thames Street and 856-842 South Bond Street, now the Coyne Industrial Laundry, were largely developed in the late 18th century by the leading figures of Fell's Point. In the late 19th century and 20th century, the properties underwent major alteration or, as in the case of 856 and 850-842 South Bond Street, were totally demolished. Any final assessment of the remaining structures at 1532-1534 Thames Street and 854-852 South Bond Street is a difficult one owing to the important role this area played in the early history of Fell's Point. The alterations of these properties by the Coyne Industrial Laundry were devastating to original material. Virtually no original interiors remain, except for part of a stair at 854 South Bond. Early brickwork exists behind the formstone of 854 as well as on the facade of 1532-1534 Thames Street (in addition to 19th century brick infill). A corner of a former exterior wall of 1532-1534 Thames remains on the interior of the Laundry.

One of the, if not the, most significant period in the history of Fell's Point is the late 18th century. And, this period of construction has suffered dramatically owing to the insensitive changes that have occurred since World War II. Therefore, survivals from this period, if only fragments, have a particular significance to the interpretation and understanding of Fell's Point. The ownership of parts of the Coyne Industrial Laundry tract by major figures in the Federal period in Fell's Point - John Bond, George Wells, William Trimble - adds historic significance.

To the south is a three bay, 2-1/2 story building (854 Bond Street) covered with formstone painted yellow. A garage door exists in the center of the first floor. Three long proportioned openings filled with jalousie windows exist on the second floor. The formstone covers the third floor openings. The proportion of the windows and the gable roof are all that remains to indicate a more elegant beginning for this building, possibly at the end of the 18th century. Removal of a portion of the formstone (July 1984) revealed a flemished bond, watertable with a quarter round brick cap, and a three-brick belt course. Extensive remodeling and changes in the 20th century removed virtually all of the original details. (photo 6)

The next building to the south on Bond Street is a two story cement block structure (mid-20th century) with a garage and pedestrian door on the first floor under a large garage door opening on the second floor. The building has a gable roof. (see photo 6)

The adjacent property, (see photos 1 & 4) around the corner on Thames Street, originally consisted of a pair of three story, three bay brick buildings, round arch windows openings are found on the second and third floors, with one over one sash, under a brick parapet. The brick around the window openings was reworked in the 20th century. Remnants of two brick belt courses and fragments of a watertable with quarter round brick caps remain. (see photos 2 & 3) The three-brick belt course is similar to the belt course at 854 South Bond as well as at the pre-1780 Catain Winning House at 830 South Bond Street. The first floor consists in the four western bays of two bricked up openings with two narrow windows running horizontally at the top of the first floor. A door exists in each of the two eastern bays.

To the west of the building is a wooden fence blocking access to the blank, three story southwest wall. The side wall runs northwest to Dallas Street. It is two stories tall, stuccoed, with no fenestration. The west wall (behind the Bond Street buildings) is two stories high constructed of concrete block along Dallas Street. (see photo 11) At the northern end (adjacent to the parking lot) is the remains of the facade of a two story, two bay alley house. (see photo 12) The second floor windows and sally port are closed by concrete block. The northern wall of the laundry (along the parking lot) is concrete block for 80' east of Dallas Street to a one story tin roofed loading dock behind which is located the two story brick wall of 852 Bond Street. (see photos 8,9,10)

In the interior of the laundry, only the party walls between the buildings remain. The space has been gutted to create long, open rooms for the laundry operation (mid-1970's). The spaces have concrete floors, where the brick former party walls terminate, the walls are constructed of concrete block; wood columns support the roof. (see photos 13,14,16,19)

The change in the partitions from brick to concrete block, approximately 60' west of Thames Street, indicates the former western limit of the earlier rowhouses. (see photo 15) The interior of the laundry continues west to Dallas Street and south to Thames Street. In the 1920's, a building was constructed covering the entire lot at 1532-1534 Thames Street (its present configuration) for a machine shop. (see photo 20)

In the southeast corner of the laundry, the northwest corner of an exterior wall of 1532-1534 Thames Street is visible. (photo 21) One window, with its rounded arch, remains. However, the first floor interior of 1532-1534 Thames Street has been totally destroyed. It now contains a storage room (to the west) and a lunch room (to the east). (see photo 23) One early window frame does remain on the west wall. (see photo 22)

The second floor at 1532-1534 Thames Street consists of three offices covered with 10th century painted paneling. (see photos 24 & 25) No indication of earlier floor plans or detailing is evident. Through a stair along the party wall with 856 S. Bond, access is gained to the third floor. The attic consists of one room probably used for storage. (photo 26) Window openings along the side (west) and rear (north) walls have been closed with cement block.

The second floor of 856 S. Bond Street is one room with a garage door on the Bond Street (east) and Dallas Street (west) walls. (photo 27) The building has no third floor.

In the mid-20th century, doors were cut through the party walls between the buildings connecting them on the second floor.

The second floor of 854 S. Bond Street consists of two rooms (one on the east -photo 28- and one on the west side of the building) covered with 20th century imitation wood paneling. No evidence of earlier detailing is evident on the second floor.

Through a door in the west wall of the second floor, access is gained to a low ceiling attic. It is from this attic space that the access to the (probably original) stair from the second to the third floor exists. The 20th century alterations shut off the original opening of the original stair to the second floor.

The stair has a molded handrail and turned balusters that probably date from the late 18th century. (photo 29) The Society for the Preservation of Federal Hill and Fell's Point has found only one other stair that is similar in a c.1780-1700 building at Broadway and Shakespeare Street.

The third floor of 854 S. Bond Street has four rooms. The northwest room contains the stair. The northeast room contains a plain, frame window surround on the east wall. (see photos 30, 31, 32) This window frame is not visible on the exterior as it is covered with formstone. The southeast and southwest rooms contain no significant detailing.

The second floor of 852 S. Bond Street consists of a paneled (20th century- see photo 28) room across the east wall leading into a hall with three rooms off it extending to the west. (photo 33) The third floor contains two rooms on the east and west sides of the building. (photo 34) Through the west wall of the second floor of 825, access is gained to the second floor of the laundry. (photo 35) This is one large room constructed of concrete block which extends across the rear of the second floors of 852 and 854 South Bond Street and west to Dallas Street.

#8 Significance (Continuation Sheet 1)

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

1532-1534 Thames Street

This property was originally Lot 19 on Fell's Point. In 1769, Ann Fell leased the lot (as well as Lot 22 or 1502-1508 Thames Street) to John Bond for the purpose of constructing a lumber yard. (Transactions of 1772 for Lot 19 Baltimore Land Records AL #D/321 and AL #E/37 mention a lumber yard.) From 1772 to 1792, the property has a confusing ownership history (see Baltimore Land Records AL #E/37; WG #S/589; WG #EE/340; WG #KK/376 and Chancery Record 34/255). The Chancery Records indicate that Isaac van Bibber vs. William Fell (Chancery 34/255) indicated that John Bond held the leasehold. The legal confusion continued as summarized in the deed of 1808 (WG #96/658) in the settling of the estate of John Bond. The 1796 City Directory and the 1798 Federal Direct Tax Assessment do not contain the names of the people associated with the lot at the end of the 18th century: Robert Britt, William Knox, John Bond, James Stewart. The watertable and belt courses indicate an 18th century first construction date.

One source often quoted for this property is the First Records of Baltimore and Jones Town 1729-1797 (Baltimore: 1907, p. 78). It contains a reference to George Well's house on the northwest corner of Thames and Bond Streets in the Commissioners of Baltimore City Record for May 15, 1792. The research in the land records indicates that George Well's shipwright, owned not

1532-1534 Thames Street, but rather 856 South Bond Street, the adjoining property which could also be described (owing to the triangular shape of the intersection) as the northwest corner. (The relevant Land Records are WG #L/390, 1779, and WG #BB/244, 1787, which refers to a house extant at 856 S. Bond.)

The Records of the Commisioners of Baltimore City for July 3, 1788, (First Records..., p. 66) in determining the location of the corner of Thames and Bond Streets refer to "... having caused the street to be measured from Lancaster Alley along the western side of Bond Street to the southeast corner of George Well's new brick house..." This could either be 1532-1534 Thames Street or 856 South Bond Street. Since Wells owned the Bond Street lot in the late 18th century, the initial interpretation supports Well's house being on Bond Street. It does not, however, help in dating a structure at 1532-1534 Thames Street.

In the early 19th century the property at 1532-1534 Thames Street was a lumber yard. From 1822 to the 1850's Archibald Kerr, with various partners, owned the property. Kerr had other property in Fell's Point including Kerr's Wharf on the south side of Thames Street.

More is known about the 19th century appearance of the building because of two public sale notices for the property.

The April 13, 1835, Baltimore American and Commercial Advertiser advertised a lot on the corner of Thames and Bond

#8 Significance (Continuation Sheet 3)

fronting sixty feet on Thames "...improved by a large three story brick building which can be readily converted into two stores for which the property is well adapted being one of the most public and most frequented part of Fell's Point, and situated near the very center of business."

Almost twenty years later, the April 19, 1852, Sun advertised a lot fronting on Thames at the northwest corner of Bond with a "...large three story brick house fronting on Thames Street and a one and one half story house in the rear used as a brewery."

The 1853 deed (ED #29/105) for the property contains a plat of the lot indicating a fifty-two foot long, three story brick house (occupied by several families) on Thames Street and a one and one half story brick building used as a brewery and a dwelling.

The Assessor's Field Books describe, in 1866, a three story brick house and a two story brick back building owned by Richard Bradyhouse which, ten years later, was leased to Herman Notte who sold "segars" and tobacco. The 1898 assessment contains the same description for the property on which H.F. Waters operated a bar.

The 1902 Sandborn Atlas shows 1532 Thames as a three story brick residence, rectangular in shape, with the shortside paralleling Thames Street. 1534 is described as a three story brick building used as a saloon; its long side paralleled Thames Street. A two story frame building connected the northeast side of 1532 to the northwest wall of 1534 creating a square form of 3 parts. A one story frame building existed in the yard. The 1917 Sandborn shows a machine shop covering the whole lot enveloping the brick structures fronting on Thames Street. The garage sized opening on the first floor of 1532 may have occurred at this time. The structures shown on the earlier 1902 Sandborn map (except for the frame one) are visible and were used as offices.

#8 Significance (Continuation Sheet 4)

Industrial use has continued on the property.

#8 Significance (Continuation Sheet 5)

854 South Bond

This property is located on Lot 18 of Fell's Point. Between 1763 and 1774 Lot 18 was held by Edward Fell; John Bond; Edward Gottier, cooper; William Spencer, scrivener; and John Cattrell, mariner. After 1771 John Cattrell erected on the central part of the Lot a building known as the "London Coffee House" which he had leased to Thomas Elliott for a period between 1772 and 1775. The property was then held by John Stevenson, merchant, until 1779 when it was sold to George Wells. (Wells already owned part of Lot 18 adjoining this piece to the south; the lot we now know as 856 South Bond.) In 1787 George Wells' son sold 854 South Bond (WG #BB 244) as well as 856 South Bond to Joseph Harrison, physician. The land records indicate that in 1787 George Wells lived in the London Coffee House (854) and Garrett Prenderville lived in the house to the south (856).

The 1866 Assessors Field Book and a 1869 public sale notice in the December 23, 1869, Sun describe a three story brick house with a two story brick back building. The assessment indicates John McCarthy operated a bar there in what the advertisement called "... an old and established business stand. . . ." The subsequent Assessors' field books and the Sandborn atlases indicate no change in the building until the 1960's.

#8 Significance (Continuation Sheet 6)

852 South Bond Street

This property is located on Lots 17 and 18 of Fell's Point. James Cattrell (see 854 above) conveyed a twenty-nine and a half foot wide lot on South Bond Street to William Trimble in 1779. Trimble was a major land holder in Fell's Point. He operated a dry goods store on Market Street (Broadway), as indicated in the 1796 Directory. The 1798 Federal Direct Tax Assessment shows Trimble owning six houses, two wood and four brick. Trimble lived in one of them and leased the remainder.

Trimble divided the Bond Street property into lots which became 852 and 850 South Bond Street. The northern lot is now a parking lot--850.) Trimble's will of 1809 bequeathes the property to his children.

In 1866, 852 South Bond Street was a two story brick house with an identical building to the north at 850. Trimble's heirs disposed of the property so that by 1876 Charles Gibson owned a two story building and a two story brick stable. Further changes occurred before the 1898 assessment which describes a three story brick house with a two story back building. The facade of 852 may date from this period as the Sandborn atlases show a three story brick store on the site. Like many of its neighbors, 852 South Bond Street was a saloon in the 20th century.

(The 1898 Assessors' Field Books show a two story brick house at 850 South Bond (now demolished) which might have been the structure built by William Trimble.)

WG #BB/244              George Wells [Jr.] to Joseph Harrison, physician
/ /1787                      This transaction indicates that in the late 1780's
George Wells lived at 854 S. Bond and Garrett Prendeville lived at what is now 856.

WG #C/390                John Stevenson to George Wells
3/10/1779                      This transaction refers to the property as the London Coffee House.
Lease                          The 1805 deed fro 856 S. Bond (WG 84/669) also refers to this property as the London Coffee House.
Wells then also owned 856 S. Bond.

AL#K/269                John Cattell to John Stevenson, merchant
7/11/1774                      This transaction refers to the London Coffee House as being Lease                          on the property.

William Spencer to John Cattell, mariner
1/26/1771                      Cattell leased the London Coffee House to Thomas Elliott, 1772-5.
Asgt.

[Lease]

AL # B/709                John Bond to William Gottier
9/30/1770                      In the Josias Carvill Hall suit (1791) against John Bond's estate, Lease                          Bond's will (Chancery Record B 34/424) refers to "my house in Fell's Point known as the Coffee House and all improvements next adjacent to said house . . ." Bond's property was sold at public auction pursuant to a decree in this case. The public notice of 11/22/1796 (see 1532-1534 Thames) refers to the exchange Coffee House [sic]. The Land Records for 854 do not indicate a public sale of this lot.
The Court records indicate that Bond (in 1785) had leased property to William Knox, George Wells, William Trimble, William Johnson, and William Hays.
